Mayor Baxter Woods ... "shall forever be retained and used by [the] City in trust for the benefit of the people of Portland as a Municipal Forest and Park and for public recreation and educational purposes..."

A brief history of Mayor Baxter Woods

"View of the F.O.J. Smith House, Portland." Oil on canvas by Harrison Bird Brown (1831-1915).

As historian Herb Adams once wrote, "Baxter Woods' brush with history came at the hands of a politician, a portrait painter, and a plow salesman." The municipal forest once was the grand estate of congressman Francis Ormond Smith, also known as "Fog" Smith "for his initials and his principles" as Mr. Adams noted.

F.O.J. Smith enjoyed a brief business venture with the portrait painter-turned-inventor Samuel F.B. Morse, who spent time at Forest Home working with the travelling plow salesman Ezra Cornell to lay the first underground telegraph cable in a field on the property.

Also known as "Forest Home" and "Smith Castle," the house sat on the site from 1836 to 1882, when, following the deaths of Smith and his wife, the property was purchased by Mayor James Phinney Baxter.

Mayor Baxter developed little of the former estate. Portions of the property were divided, with several acres to the north sold to the Roman Catholic Diocese and streets and parcels developed to the south. Upon J.P. Baxter's death in 1921, care for the property fell to his youngest son Percival, the eventual Governor of Maine and founder of Baxter State Park. Percival soon opened the woods to the public for the purposes of passive recreation and the land soon became known as the "Baxter Bird Sanctuary." The community embraced the property and the care of it.

The Cumberland County Audubon Society and the Longfellow Garden Club teamed to maintain the nature trails and the Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts adopted their own activity areas.

In April of 1946, Governor Percival Baxter presented the 29.5 acres to the People of Portland as a municipal forest to be kept in its natural state. To this end, he established distinct deed restriction to guide the use and maintenance of the park. The woods were to be known forever as "Mayor Baxter Woods."
